I bought this hoping I would get a good amount of actual activities and games I could do easily with kids, and print out without all the long, drawn out stories. One of the things that the author advises to do is to go in early before your day starts to get ready. That is unrealisted unless you live in a small town where everyone knows you because especially nowadays, most schools are locked up until about 30 mins before school starts, and even then you have to buzz in and no one will let you in right away because they do not know you. Schools where I work require you to sign in the front office, and then you have to wait until the secretary or janitor is ready while they are doing 10 other things in the shuffle of activity, to escort you to your assigned classroom. Then, you are lucky if you actually have 10 mins or so to find the sub plans if you are lucky enough to have a neat, organized teacher you are subbing for. Forget making copies, because you won't have any time, you will have to spend your own money to make copies of stuff to do for up to 30 kids which can get costly. And then there are the small details she left out like how many times kids will say, my teacher does it this way, every little thing like pencil sharpening, bathroom breaks, etc etc etc can be really frustrating and she does not really address this. Also, the school office will expect your attendance to be taken before a certain time twice a day for state purposes, and handed in by a certain time or else, so you better ask for that folder from the office. Also, she does not address the span of horribly messy teachers to extremely neat teachers' classrooms you will have to teach in, and trying to find their stuff that the admin may want you to use is stressful.
